INDIANA.

Mr. Gray Fails to Connect with the Watterson Banquet at Greencastle.

Special to the Indianapolis Journal. GREENCASTLE, May 17. - The so-called "reception and banquet" which the local Democratic managers tendered Henry Watterson on the occasion of his visit to this city would have yielded a better return for the investment if the Journal had not "given the snap away." The scheme was to organize a "Mutual Admiration Society." and while paying court to the Star-eyed Goddess of Reform, set up the pins in aid of the Gray-Voorhees-Matson combination. "Uncle Isaac" was down on the programme for a speech, and the local Democratic organ of to-day reports him as present, and responding to a toast in his he nor, so confident were the managers of reaping the benefits of his presence in aid of this scheme. It was given out at the eleventh hour that "Uncle Isaac" was ill, and would thus be denied the pleasure of "shaking hands across the bloody chasm" with the Kentucky journalist. But "Putnam's favorite son" was hand, if Uncle Isaac was not, and so cheered was he by the signs of the political zodiac that though he didn't give public utterance to his ambition, it was evident to the minds of his hearers he was willing to again lead the forlorn hope in the gubernatorial race, even to the point of surrendering a railway attorneyship for the empty honor. Matson has his heart set on donning the senatorial toga, and regards mbernatorial race as a stepping-stone to it. With Gray out of the way, which he would be as a vice-presidential quantity, the field would be open to Matson, and he would have another chance to again distinguish or extinguish himself in the legislative arena as "the soldiers' friend."

Hon. Frank Ader did the honors of the reception as only a sophomore can, and Mr. Watterson responded with words of cheer that reconciled his friends of cheer that reconciled his friends to the charge of $1.50 per head for their suppers. Of course, he had something to say about a "tariff for revenue only." The necessity for upholding this issue was insisted upon, and the hope expressed that the Republican party would allow the South to solve the race problem for herself, which was simply another form of the old "hands-off" cry. Mr. Ball, of the Terre Haute Gazette, also dilated on the beauties of "Tariff reform." John E. Lamb's allotment by the toast-master was "How May we Elect a Democratic President in '92?" and when he sat down his hearers had a clearer conception than ever of "how not to do it." Hon. J. B. Curtis, of Indianapolis, then shed a flood of light on "The Legislative Campaign." Mr. Taylor, a DePauw student, told of "Democracy in the University." told of "Democracy in the University."

There were about seventy-five guests in all, and the spread was elaborate.

Peru Republicans. Special to the Indianapolis Journal.

PERU, May 18 .- One of the largest, most orderly and enthusiastic gatherings held in this city for many a day was the mass-convention of the Republicans of this city last evening, in the court-house, to select delegates to the congressional, joint-senatorial and county conventions. W. E. Bailey was President. Interest centered in the joint-senatorial delegates, as Miami county is entitled to this nomination. The principal contestants are R. J. Loveland and W. F. Daly. Good speeches were made and un-usual interest was manifested, which will be apparent at the coming elections.

IRRIGATION FOR EGYPT.

A Reservoir Constructed by the Patriarch Joseph About to Be Reopened.

Washington Special. Mr. Cope Whitehouse is in the city, and will sail for Europe next Wednesday on the City of New York. His discovery of a de-pression in the Egyptian desert which was utilized by the patriarch Joseph when he was Prime Minister of Pharaoh Raiyan as a reservoir for irrigation purposes, and which it is proposed to renew, has attracted special attention in view of the great interest now taken in the West as to the possibilities of irrigation. Speaking of the sit-uation in Egypt. Mr. Whitehouse said:

"The Nile when low only has 20,000,000 cubic metres of water per diem for the use of lower Egypt, which suffices for only half of the cultivable area. The Raiyan reservoir, which would cover 250 square miles and would have a depth of 250 feet, would suffice to double the water output, and permit the extension of irrigation in the Delta to the utmost limit of the culti-

"The Egyptian goverment, with a view to determining the value of this storage reservior, has had an examination made of the cultivable area of the country, and it was shown that 3,200,000 acres could be added to the 6,000,000 acres now under cultivation, provided the volume of water during the low Nile period could be proportionately increased.

"The creation of this storage reservoir would serve a double purpose. When the Nile rises to a dangerous height it would allow the surplus water to pour into the reservoir and thus relieve the levees. An excessive flood is the worst disaster that can appen to Egypt. It is estimated by Mr. Wilcox, a government engineer, that a canal sufficient to relieve the Nile flood and convey the water to the Raiyan depression, or reservoir, would require a width of 250 feet and a length of seven miles. This same canal would also be used to discharge the water from the reservoir throughout the country during the low Nile period, when irrigation is necessary, and thus the available water supply would be doubled during the annual hundred days of drought,

"The great historical interest in this work arises from the fact that the Raiyan cana is named after the Pharaoh or Shepherd King, who reigned at the time the patriarch Joseph was Prime Minister of Egypt. The King's name was Raiyan. A large number of Arab traditions that have been collected attribute to Joseph the vast engineering works, which still are important factors in the cultivation of lower Egypt. There is a long canal still in use, which is said to have been constructed by Joseph and served to irrigate the country during the low Nile. A small spring, which is the only trace of water left in the Raiyan basin, bears the name of 'Ain,' or the fountain of Raiyan.

Lient, Col. Ross, the inspector-general of Lieut.-Col. Ross, the inspector-general of irrigation, has recently stated in the London Times that the government of Egypt will proceed with this work as soon as the flood canals in upper Egypt have been com-pleted. It is expected that the canal will be opened in 1893 at a cost of £6,000,000.

WHAT A MILK PUNCH DID.

An Episode of Frontier Life on the Backbone of the Continent.

I crossed the plains the first time in 1854. There was not much gingerbread about it. you bet. Injins, snakes, drouth, heat, dust, burnt feet, blistered lips and bleeding nose east of the mountains; snow, frost, cold starvation and freezing among the mountains. I was not a Mormon then, and had no fire of fanaticism, no zeal for the building up of Zion sizzling in my veins. I saw no promise of a gold crown and a jewsharp for me in the skies if I should leave my bones on the trail to be cleaned off by coyotes and bleached in the burning sun of the next summer. In my boyhood 1 had been brought up pious-like. My good old mother is a saint, and I get my natural piety from her.

Well, as I say, I had no promise of a tick-et of admission to heaven from a parson when I started out West as a youth to find a fortune; and when I got into a tight place never spent much time in prayer, but set about exerting myself to get out. Our train got stuck in Emigration Canyon. south of Salt Lake City. The snow piled down around and over us until we were blockaded beyond all apparent possibility of release. Had no fodder for the stock and it starved. Our own provisions ran out, and we lived on the dead oxen until they had disappeared, and then we ate their hides, and at length were glad to chew and suck at the black-snakes; that is, the bull-whacker whips with which we drove the teams. Some of the party prayed, but most of us had to work to make paths through the snow wall and gather wood to keep us from freezing to death. It was the hardest winter I ever experienced, but while it looked as if we should all die right there, I never yielded to the thought, and kept telling the boys that a live dog was better than a dead lion.

our party broke up, unable to go further, and most of its members went into the Mormon Church, in order to derive the benefits. temporal, of the order. I recruited there, and when the spring got settled went on to Nevada, and was one of the party to make a new trail through that country. I became familiar with the country between the Salt Lake basin and Mexico and the Pacific. By 1857 I was on the Overland, and held the reins over its teams for years. I married a woman who had come out with a party of Mormons, and through her influence I finally joined the Mormon Church, and have never been sor-ry that I did so. I went into southern Utah and took up land and became a rancher. There were lots of Injins all over then, and they were mighty bold, and at times ugly. I could talk Injin as well as I could United States, and never had any trouble with the vermin, because I was always careful to give them no chance to think that I was an enemy to them. They knew me all over the country in Utah and Nevada, and were the country in Utah and Nevada, and were as friendly as it was possibly for them to be with any one upon whom they look with continual suspicion. Once, however, I thought that my family and myself would have to surrender.

A band of Utes, under an old chief who had been disturbed by some passing whites, came to my ranch one morning at daylight and surrounded my shanty. There was a white man with us who had come down to look out for a ranch for himself, and this was the first time he had seen a tomahawk brandished over his head. It made him sick to hear the Injins whoop. I went out and taked with the truck, but they were surly all through. I backed into the house and counciled a bit. There was a big jug of whisky under the bed, and I made some stiff milk punch; the Injins whooping away outside. I wanted the stranger to drink, but he was too sick to touch it. I swallowed a bowl of it and went out. Now, said I to the old chief, my wife and children are in the shanty, and I don't want them tilled. dren are in the shanty, and I don't want them killed. If you will agree to let them take a team and drive to Salt Lake, I will give myself up to you and you can kill me as you please. There is a stranger white man in the house who has never wronged you, and I'd like you to let him go, too, but if you must kill somebody, take the men and let the women and children go.

The redskips pulled off to consult and I The redskins pulled off to consult, and I went into the house. Presently they came up again and said they had come to a conup again and said they had come to a conclusion. It was to the effect that they would spare no one. Men, women and children had to die, and they wanted no more talk. I made up my mind that there was no way out, but I hadn't surrendered. Taking up the bowl of milk punch, I drank deep. Without thinking of it, my flesh was making up its mind to die hard. With the whisky spinning through my veins, I went out again, armed with a wicked knife, and said that, as they were determined to and said that, as they were determined to kill us all, we would die together. It was the boldest game of bluff I ever played and I had only that chance. I said the others might kill the children and my wife, but I would wrestle with the chief. He and I would go to the happy hunting ground together. I drew my knife and started for the chief. My movement was so unexpected, and my whole action and bearing apparently so fearless, that I frightened the chief and he turned and ran. The band followed him and they disappeared. That milk punch had done the business, said the old man, with a smile, as he concluded his

SCHOOLS OF THE LUTHERANS.

St. Paul's Congregation Takes a Stand Against Anything Like the Bennet Law.

Some concern has recently been expressed by the German Lutherans in certain parts of the State that legislative action, on the line of the Bennet law of Wisconsin, is to be undertaken by the next Indiana General Assembly. This matter was discussed at a meeting of the members of the St. Paul Lutheran Church, in this city, yesterday afternoon. At the close of the speeches the following was adopted:

We are not enemies of the public schools, but consider and acknowledge them to be a political

We are always willing to pay our taxes for the support of the public schools.

We are opposed to any and every grant of public school moneys to private schools.

We are by no means enemies of the English language. On the contrary, we endeavor to give the children in our parochial schools as thorough an instruction in the English language as possi-ble, since this is the official language of our coun-try, but we insist upon our right to establish private schools at our own expense, and to regulate and govern them without any interference on the part of the State, according to our religious convictions and according to sound educational principles, that our children may become Lutheran Christians as well as loyal and good citi-

We therefore protest against each and every endeavor that may be made by a law obnoxious to our parochial schools, to deprive us of or encroach upon our personal and religious liberty, as guaranteed by the Constitution of the United States, and by the Constitution of our own State; and we believe it our bounden duty to oppose to the utmost, any law of that kind, with all the legitimate means in our power.

legitimate means in our power.

Following this a committee was appointed to act with like committees from other German Lutheran congregations in the State to ask the political parties to adopt platforms in accordance with their views. Each party will be requested to declare against any legislation like that of the Bennet law. The committee consists of Daniel Fechtmann, Charles Stuckmeyer, Henry Laut, Henry Mowwe and August Tamm. These gentlemen will also represent their congregation at the meeting of Germans at Mænnerchor Hall to-night to consider the recent action of the school board regarding the teaching of German in the city schools. The Lutherans have in and near the city seven schools—four on the South Side, two on the North Side, and one in Springdale. They also have schools in nearly every city in the State.

Makes the Weak Strong

The marked benefit which people in run-down or weakened state of health derive from Hood's Sarsaparilla conclusively proves the claim that this medicine "makes the weak strong." It does not act like a stimulant, imparting a temporary feeling of strength from which there must follow a reaction of greater weakness than before, but possessing just those elements which the system craves for and readily seizes, it builds up in a perfectly natural way, all the weakened parts, acts upon the blood as a purifier and vitalizer, and assists to healthy action those important organs, the kidneys and liver. "For five years I was sick every spring, but last year began in February to take Hood's Sarsaparilla. I used five bottles, and have not seen a sick | ferent person."-R. J. RILEY, Business Manager day since."-G. W. SLOAN, Milton, Mass.

ENJOYING A WARM SUNDAY.

Demand for Ice-Cream Soda Becomes Lively.

The favorable weather yesterday attracted thousands to the streets and the outskirts of the city. The result was shekels for the street-car company. Endless strings of cars passed the transfer station loaded to their utmost. The streets were crowded all the afternoon, but at 10 o'clock the tired populace was at home again in very large measure. Illinois street, so crowded as a rule, was well nigh deserted. The only busy man between

The demand for cream for ice-cream is, by the way, soon to raise the price of butter, says a bucolic dealer in the article.

"That's considerable is it not?"

"Oh, that's nothing. We used forty-four gallons one day, and in hot weather will average half that. The forty-four gallons meant three thousand glasses sold at 5 cents a glass, giving $150 for the day, with a clear profit of 212 cents a glass. The net receipts on account of the soda fountain were therefore $75. We are content with a good thing in making from $30 to $40 a day on the fountain in the summer time.
